

Alexandria Gazette

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8, 1878.

At a social party there are certain signs by which one can detect the young man who wears a porous plaster. Early in the evening, before salutory exercise has warmed him up and softened the plaster, he appears erect, almost haughty, in his bearing. Many a young man, indeed, has been termed proud when it was really only a porous plaster that aided him. When he enters the mazy dance, however, the signs become more unmistakable. With bodily heat and perspiration the porous plaster wakes up into action and caresses the back of that young man, and, though he feels tickled, he grips his teeth hard, and then laughs merrily, while his partner asks him what the matter is. In a happy interval he is observed to back up against some friendly projection and try to imitate himself, his countenance showing all the desperation of his soul, or he is seen in an obscure part of the hallway frantically trying to reach his right hand down his back under his shirt collar to scratch. Many a young lady who listens joyously to the soft words of some chosen young man little dreams the agony that is crawling all over his back, and which she rarely detects in his smiling face. New York Sunday Call.

"Don't worry about my going away, my darling. Absence, you know, makes the heart grow fonder." "Oh somebody else," added the darling.
